The brilliant side of Joan Miró is well known to us, but the truth is that he was tormented by the idea of losing his ability to provoke. He had a sometimes destructive personality. As his grandson, Joan Punyet, states: "Miró could be a treasure by day, but also a monster by night". This documentary aims to provide a new perspective on the character and work of this genius, focusing on the lesser known aspects of his personal universe.

Albert (21) is faced with a third bout of cancer, and this time he is determined to battle in his own way.

With nothing but a camera, he starts recording his own experiences and recounting his trials and tribulations, and so Against The Tide is born. Albert's story soon becomes a social movement, breaking away from existing taboos surrounding cancer and sharing a new perspective regarding the disease with the world: a way of facing cancer based on communication, a healthy lifestyle and an insatiable will to live instead of fighting to survive while bedridden.

This social Internet phenomenon will bring Albert's fight to the hearts of thousands of people worldwide.

Astrid is the name given to adversity, luck and sacrifice, to situations that are capable of changing our destiny. After a traumatic accident that forced doctors to amputate her right foot, Astrid's life took a turn and she ended up becoming a professional snowboarder. The accident, the 13 surgeries, the decision to amputate, the ability to walk again, the first and disastrous downs, the improvement, the trips, the frustration, the decision to get back up and the moment that gave everything meaning: Astrid, incredulous and on the floor crying with emotion over the fact that she had just won a Paralympic medal.

The Arab Spring, the Iranian Revolution and the Catalan referendum held on 1 October 2017 provide clear examples of the role and power of social media in today's society. During these mobilisations, thousands of images and videos of police attacks recorded by citizens went viral on social platforms. How might they destabilise governments?

At the same time mobilisations are taking place, a lot of misinformation is spread across the internet because users don't verify its source. It is in that moment when "fake news" appears as a trending topic. But does fake news really describe what is going on? Some experts say it is used by some, such as Donald Trump, to discredit mass media.

Havana is still full of life. Its people flood its streets, squares, churches, parks, dance halls and schools. It continues to pass on a heritage of old jokes, African rhythms and colourful images. It is about Changó and Fidel. Herencia is a story of emotions. Images speak for themselves as the film skips from one time period to another. Everything visually finds its way in and ultimately transgresses what is normal or ordinary. This is a journey that follows no certain path. The ocean was crossed hundreds of years ago. Since the Dalai Lama left Tibet in 1959, the Pokara refugee camp (Nepal) shelters a big Tibetan community, fighting every day to preserve its culture. At the present time, about 150.000 Tibetans live in exile.

The 2001 earthquake in Gujarat region (India) took 20.000 lives, left 167.000 wounded and destroyed about 400.000 homes. In just few seconds, a whole community was impelled to take action for survival and to collectively deal with an unexpected change.

A dialogue between two anonymous voices, two survivors who face life and memory for a better future for their community.

Two very different families with something in common: a transgender child. Violeta, who just turned 11, decided five years ago that she wanted to be called and dress as a girl. It took a while for her baffled parents to accept her demand, but now Violeta leads a mostly happy life. The legal challenges and complex medical decisions that lie ahead in order to complete her transition are explored through other, older characters. Alan's story is quite the opposite: he suffered at school and his family's support wasn't enough to prevent an outcome that mobilized his entire hometown.

Sara Bahai, the first female taxi driver and women's rights activist in Afghanistan, is garnering recognition in the public sphere she has always aspired. However, her greatest conflict arises in her own home when her sick mother, Bibi, asks her to marry before she dies.

"Oh, Dear Sara" portrays the collision between the public sphere and Sara's private life. A tension arises in Sara as she longs to be part of that public world where women don't belong, while her private life tries to keep her from her dream, enslaving her within the inner depths of patriarchal tradition.

Paco Bernal decided, despite the adversities he faced and his functional diversity, to celebrate his fifty-fourth birthday party. Rosa, his sister, with the help of a small circle of friends, arranged the preparations for the event, which had been held for years. Paco's birthday has become an example of resistance and the victory of life, both for himself and for those around him. His functional diversity, his health problems and his relationship with society are three factors that have marked his personality and have deepened his inner strength, allowing him to continue enjoying life and his passion for painting year after year.

Paradise does not exist, or perhaps exists as a merely Platonic ideal, a utopian concept. Looking for it may become an essential part of a lot of people's lives, but it can also be a source of disappointment. Our documentary develops this idea based on the story of people seeking a paradise not yet found. The theatre show "Painted Paradise" by the clown Pepa Plana compares different kinds of exile: multiple people searching for a better place to live.

Parchis was more than the most popular kids band in Spain between 1979 and 1985, it was a major social phenomenon. Their success was registered by millions of album sales, worldwide tours, movies and a handful of songs that keep engaging new generations. But how did its protagonists experience it from inside? How did they personally live the transition from childhood to adulthood? Was being a member of Parchis an opportunity for personal and career development or was it a lifelong burden?

Project niños (Cold War in Sunny Spain) unveils an unknown chapter of the Cold War: the mass interrogation programme the CIA carried out on Spaniards returning to their country from the USSR in the late 1950s. These Spanish nationals had been sent to the USSR in 1937 as children to protect them from the Spanish Civil War and ended up settling there and working in the Soviet strategic industries.

The KGB was not out of the game either; they took advantage of this migration of humans to Spain to infiltrate some of their agents.

There is a dissident and combative Catalunya, that lives on and resists under the layer of official debate. A Catalunya where — from the time of the fallacy of Transition— disobedience, dissidence and self organisation in the face of poverty have been, and are, palpable, as are the repressive methods to eradicate them. Rebels sets out, as a feature length documentary, to get to the bottom of this story and to explore what we find, with a zoom lens focussed on the last four decades. Social movements vs the system and the system vs social movements; we establish links between the past and present, in a Catalunya which does not give up, which creates alternatives, which resists.

Pep and Margalida live at Son Gornals, a century-old farm located in Mallorca's countryside. Retired and full of life, they make sure the farm is constantly running smoothly. They take care of the house, the vegetable garden and the pool, and Pep feeds and fattens the rabbits, chickens, lamb and pigs. Each winter, he buys eight piglets that he nourishes each and every day until the slaughter. On this day, the whole family gathers in Son Gornals; the old and the young work hard on the slaughter, while enjoying this family tradition. With the clan gathered and diligent, and the wisdom and sharpened cleaver of Toni the butcher, the slaughter of Son Gornals is celebrated once again. With the pantry full, winter can come.

1970's. Famous Chinese writer San Mao lived a singular love story with Spanish free diver José María Quero. They travelled to the Spanish colony of Western Sahara, where San Mao chronicled her day-to-day experiences in the desert. Her book "Stories from the Sahara" became a best seller in Taiwan and in China, but her romance with José María was suddenly disrupted when he lost his life in a diving accident. Adding to this tragedy, some years later San Mao took her own life in Taiwan, having reached the pinnacle of her fame as a writer but unable to cope with the loss of her lover. Though San Mao is one of the most popular and widely read literary figures in the Chinese-speaking world, she remains virtually unknown in the West.

Hoping to rebuild the Monastery of Sigena chapterhouse, a twelfth-century building that suffered fire damage during the Spanish Civil War, Juan Naya, astrophysicist and resident of Villanueva de Sigena, sets in motion an almost impossible project. He begins with memories and scarce documentation: some black and white photographs taken just before the fire and the withered remains of a few paintings. But is there more information out there? And what techniques should be used to recreate the room correctly? What colours could instil those paintings with life? And most intriguing of all are those parts that have gone missing over the years. What to do with them?

Susi is a female elephant who has been imprisoned in Barcelona zoo since 2002. In February 2008 her matriarch Alicia was killed in front of her and she entered into a serious state of depression. In 2009, the NGO for animal rights Libera! launched a global campaign called FREE SUSI! with the aim of transferring her to a so called animal sanctuary. Despite a massive social support, the campaign was not succesful; but Susi became a symbol for those who fight for changing the regrettable situation of animals living in zoos, towards a more sustainable, educational and ethical model.

"Susi. An elephant in the room" dives us into a transmedia universe inviting the users to be part of this revolutionary worldwide debate by 3 main platforms: an interactive documentary, a series of 4 documentary short films, and an educational app.

In France, there exists a reality unbeknownst to most: more than 20,000 Catalan-speaking people of gypsy ethnicity reside there. Many of them define themselves as Catalan gypsies, while others are unaware of their origins. All, however, have preserved the Catalan language for generations. This linguistic curiosity differentiates them as a community, allowing them to speak amongst themselves without being understood by those around them. The aim of this documentary is to shed light on this European cultural reality, as well as to further understand how this group of Catalan-speaking gypsies have maintained their roots through so many generations and what their future challenges are.

1492: News of the New World, a land full of wonder and treasure, would spread like wildfire across Europe. The discovery of the Americas uncovered a source of incalculable riches that Spain endeavoured to exploit exclusively. To make this a reality, the Crown devised an unprecedented naval system: the Spanish treasure fleet, a pioneering merchant flotilla protected by galleons from the Spanish Armada that would connect Spain with its American colonies.

For more than 200 years other European powers would attempt to take down the Spanish monopoly, using all of the means at their disposal: piracy, privateering, smuggling or direct attacks against the fleet. This would prove to be a substantial challenge.

The unlikely couple of all –a Spanish 'antisystemic' activist who has chosen to live at Calai's refugee camp and a Sudanese man who would rather die than remain in Europe, which he feels has treated him like a criminal since he first set foot on the continent. Will he, a devout Muslim, marry her, a feminist atheist, in order to get his papers and be able to remain in Europe? It's not so easy, we will learn.

In Toloriu, a village in the Catalan Pyrenees, there's a legend that tells of Xipahuatzin, the daughter of Aztec emperor Moctezuma, brought there by Baron Joan de Grau, who was one of Hernán Cortés's companions during the Conquest of Mexico. Years after her arrival, the princess died of sadness, perhaps because she never got used to the cold mountain winters. I moved from Mexico to Spain three years ago. I've decided to go and explore the place where the princess lived. At the same time, I am discovering these mountains in the same way as the characters tell this story. The film deals with human relationships in the spaces we inhabit, the places that we want to feel are ours. We fill them with meanings, memories and stories. What is a homeland, a nation or a community, if not a place within ourselves?

The old Russian city Tolyatti which once was a symbol of progress and socialist pride is nowadays the poorest in Russia. It was known for its car industry, mainly for the legendary car called LADA.

Currently it's a deteriorated place, stuck in the moment and with the highest youth unemployment rates in the country. In this desolated context arises 'Boyevaya Klassika', a teenagers' movement based on the idea of rescuing the old cars from the local factory. They aren't only able to give these icons, a second chance but they also turn them into a distraction, rebelliousness and expression towards hope.

Thirty years ago, Hernando Toro found his calling: to portray the underclass. In his photography studio, located in a prison in Barcelona where he himself was incarcerated for drug trafficking, he learned how to see humans beyond their crimes. Today, at a pension in Bogotá, he explores the soul of the excluded, and refuses to die as an artist in the midst of anonymity.

A feature-length documentary that reveals the magical-realistic ideas of death held by three highly unique minority communities: the Tana Toraja in Indonesia, the widows of Vrindaban in India and the Mayas of Pomuch in Mexico. Through our main characters' stories, we will discover the collective imagination that feeds their culture and mortuary beliefs. We will travel through the different phases of death according to their autochthonous traditions: waiting, death and mourning.

Pascual Iranzo is an enigmatic hairdresser from Barcelona with a unique idea of what it means to cut hair. Who is this special man who seems to be something straight out of a hall of wonders? At 87, Pascual has maintained his supreme hairdressing skills and boasts incredible vitality. There's no doubt about how much Pascual defies normality with his singular way of understanding the world. Between scissors, friends and cocktails, Pascual elegantly shows us what an eccentric, unique and irreplaceable person he is, a man who never ceases to transform and reinvent himself.

Wild City (Ciutat i Selva) is the story of three girls who left their hometown to study in Barcelona. Following their everyday life, and seen through a comedic, friendly lense, we get a closer look at their perceptions of a small town and how it affects your life and personality. We see a bunch of girls who escaped the constant watch of family, schoolmates or neighbours. We see a group of friends who do not know what they want yet, but they sure know where not to be.

The German Pavilion, built in 1929, was thought to be crossed. But the pavilion is also a maze that will retain you. If you want to cross it you will just be able to cross the axes arranged in the longitudinal direction. In the interior of the pavilion you will find a wall of onyx, its silicon veils will burst into your look's height and, like Buñuel and Dalí also in 1929, you will be hurt. Your presence will become phantasmagoric, until you'll find a sculpture on the water: a new human, feminine and large form captured at the time of her unveiling.
